Interactive comment on "Building bridges between experts and the public: a comparison of two-way communication formats for flooding and air pollution risk" by Maria Loroño-Leturiondo et al.

Anonymous Referee #1

Your suggested amendments seem ok.

Two things:

1. The comments I made were only examples over a page or so of the original text. There are other places where the way the paper was written needs to be addressed.

2. one technique you might consider is reading the paper aloud to yourself. This helps pick up errors that the eye slides over because it sees what it expects to see (and not what is actually written on the paper).

It also helps writers to punctuate correctly. The places you pause while reading aloud are the places where some form of punctuation should be placed: a comma, a colon, semi-colon, full stop. Just find a quiet room so people do not think you are strange!