GC Insights: Space sector careers resources in the UK need a greater diversity of roles
M. O. Archer et al.

We thank the editors for accepting our manuscript subject to some technical corrections. We outline here how we have responded to these.

1) I think the title of the paper should have "UK" in it (similar to the edit you correctly have made in the abstract). In addition to correctly representing the scope of your work, I think it will also be helpful for your article to appear in relevant search results.

Perhaps "GC Insights: Space sector career resources in the UK need a greater diversity of roles"

We have changed the title as the editor suggests.

2) In Fig 1c (the word cloud), do the different font sizes mean something? I suggest either making the font size equal or explaining its relevance in the caption.

The word cloud was produced by software that took the words along with their desired sizes and colours and fit these into a shape. Despite all the sizes being set as equal, the result was some words had different sizes. As we were unable to find other software that would produce the desired outcome, we have simply added a note to the caption stating that the font sizes have no meaning.
